Gladioli

No home without a garden

No garden without glads.

In presenting my 1925 catalog I desire to call your attention to many new varieties which I have added to my collection, also the elimination of some of the older varieties.

The support that you have given me in the past, your repeated orders year after year and the many kind letters you have sent me are all fully appreciated.

The new seedlings of my own origination are all gems and while my prices are low on them I assure you that they are worthy or they would not have been propagated and placed on the market.

Soliciting a continuation of your patronage which I will always strive to merit by sending out first class bulbs only, I remain

Sincerely and Respectfully,
JOHN C. DAVIS.

Plant a garden of glads and be glad

Dozen sold at 10 times single price.

All bulbs 1½ size and larger unless otherwise specified

Culture

Plant in the spring after danger of frost is over. The soil should be rich and mellow, spaded deep, and enriched with fertilizer. Plant the bulbs four to eight inches apart in the row and from three inches deep in heavy soil to five inches in lighter soil. Keep them well watered and give them plenty of cultivation. Do not allow a hard crust to form around the plants.

Dig in the fall after foliage begins to turn brown or after several heavy frosts. Cut tops off just above the bulb and lay out thin for a few days to thoroughly dry. Then remove the old bulb and roots, put them in basket or trays not over four inches deep and store in your fruit or vegetable cellar away from heat. Do not tie your bulbs in a paper bag or keep them in any kind of deep tin receptacle as they will mold and rot in either.

Do not be deceived with the thought that Gladioli will grow in any soil or under any conditions for they will not; any soil that will grow potatoes will produce fine flowers. They will not thrive under a tree or among shrubbery nor along a cellar wall or against the garage. The glory of the noon day sun is needed to increase their growth and enhance their beautiful colorings.
